Matthew (Matt) Stein is originally from Rhode Island. A decorated Army Ranger, Matt entered a career of service as an Army Officer immediately after college, where he led multiple formations in conventional and special operations forces. Matt has nine overseas deployments in support of counterterrorism or other National Security Objectives. He holds a Master's Degree in National Security Studies from the U.S. Naval War College. Following his military service, he joined Onebrief, continuing his service outside of uniform.

As Onebrief's VP of Strategic Programs and Initiatives, Matt leads the company's most innovative initiatives and work supporting the U.S. military's modernization priorities and NATO's most consequential programs, including the Army's Next Generation Command and Control (NGC2), Next Generation Constructive (NGC), and the NATO Defence Innovation Accelerator for the North Atlantic (DIANA).

Matt is passionate about solving complex problems in defense technology and accelerating the delivery of superior tools into the hands of warfighters. His work is driven by a simple objective: ensure that America wins.

Outside of work, Matt lives near Tampa, Florida, where he splits his time between commenting on the temperature of the Gulf, critiquing youth soccer, and architecting the most believable fishing story.
